CRL Resources on 19th-Century Christian Missionary Work in Africa 8

THE SOUTH AFRICAN OUTLOOK
Formerly "The Christian Express."

April 1, 1922 issue of The South African Outlook (Lovedale, South Africa), formerly called The Christian Express. From CRL's World Newspaper Archive–African Newspapers.

In This Issue

This issue of the Focus on Global Resources newsletter highlights sources for research on Sub-Saharan Africa, featuring the recently released World Newspaper Archive collection of digitized African newspapers from the 19th and early 20th centuries. These newspapers, drawn from CRL's own collections, include many titles not found elsewhere that survive today only due to the prescience and efforts of members of the Cooperative Africana Microform Project. CRL's James Simon explores the new research based on these titles, demonstrating the perennial value of this collection.

Ariel Marcus's survey of CRL collections on 19th-century Christian missionary work in Africa reminds us of the impact of the precursors of colonial regimes in the region. For example, Mr. Marcus points out that the London Missionary Society first sent the legendary explorer David Livingstone to South Africa in 1840.

DRUM: OCTOBER 1950

After latest riots in P.E. volunteers in their military styled uniforms carried John Nongoma Jebe's coffin, draped in A.N.C. colours.

The Eastern Province is

A POLITICAL TIME-BOMB

TWO days before June 26, 1950—"Day of Mourning"—a poster appeared near the New Brighton Terminus. On it a human eye was drawn above the following inscription, unpunctuated, in Xhosa: "You and Yon You are being seen You are fighting against the freedom of the Native people Keep quiet and be silent Your end is miserable The blood of the African will be asked of you We are soldiers of the new Africa." It had been rumoured that people who didn't support the protest would be knifed or shot. The 1950 protest was against the Group Areas and Suppression of Communism Bills. "We warn the Government that the mood of the people is becoming tense," said Mr. W. M. Sisulu, then general secretary of the African National Congress, when he addressed 15,000 people in New Brighton on June 18, 1950. This set the mood for the whole of the Eastern Cape, now a bowl of political tension. It's today a political time-bomb, hanging over the major centres of Port Elizabeth, Grahamstown, Uitenhage, Port Alfred, Kirkwood, Hankey and East London. P.E., with the biggest African population, in the Cape, is the core of this bowl. And think of Cape A.N.C. politics. You can't forget personalities like Dr. L. J. K. Njongwe, former Cape chairman; R. Matji, provincial secretary; M. Mbiko, Eastern Cape chairman; G. N. Tshume, chief regional volunteer of the A.N.C.; Prof. Z. K. Matthews; Rev. J. Calata; and women like Mrs. Baard; Mrs. V. Bisset; Mrs. V. Gqirana.

Things reached fever pitch when the people of Port Elizabeth went on a sit-down strike which paralysed the town's industry while it lasted. On March 9, 1951, the City Council discussed a plan to introduce registration of Africans under Influx Control regulations. According to Councillor Martin, registration would control "vagrant Natives; help the police in preventing and detecting crime; protect the established Native worker; provide revenue that could be ploughed back in location development." Otherwise, he said, "we will have a black sea here." The central government eventually brought pressure on P.E. and influx control is a reality. On September 24, 1951, the Town Council agreed to increase the McNamee Village rentals on 2,722 houses. On October 10, an anti-rent protest campaign was set afoot with a sit-down strike. The Council withdrew the new rents. Four thousand volunteers took part in the Defiance Campaign which began on June 26, 1952. In October of the same year the historical New Brighton Riot broke out over a tin of paint as Golden City Post recently revealed. An African carrying a parcel that looked suspiciously like a tin of paint that had been reported stolen was stopped by a police-man at New Brighton station. The man is said to have shown a hostile attitude and his friends are alleged to have joined him and assaulted the

COMPUTER GENERATED DOCUMENTS AND THE LAW OF EVIDENCE IN BOTSWANA

E. K. QUANSAH*

1. INTRODUCTION

One of the means through which a fact may be proved in legal proceedings is by the production of a document containing that fact. The role a document may play when tendered as evidence depends on what the document is expected to do. The document may not necessarily provide the court with the requisite information it needs to decide the issue before it. It may, for instance in a criminal case, serve as evidence of a thing, which is the subject matter of the summons/indictment. For example, where the accused is charged with stealing a chequebook and the chequebook is tendered by the prosecution as an exhibit at the trial.

The word "document" is not susceptible to an exact definition. It has been defined in various ways in different jurisdictions to include everything that contains the written or pictorial proof of something[1] and any written thing capable of being evidence.[2] What is clear from the

Title: The Independence of the Republic of Congo: Texts of the Speeches Given at the Official Session of the National Assembly and During the Public Proclamation of Independence

Description
This booklet, issued by the Ministry of Information of the Republic of the Congo, is a collection of speeches given by high-ranking Congolese and French politicians at a special session of the Congolese National Assembly on August 14-15, 1960, convened to mark the country's independence from France, which took effect on August 15, 1960. Included are speeches by the first president of the Republic of the Congo, Fulbert Youlou (1917-72), a speech by André Malraux, and a message from French President Charles de Gaulle read by Malraux. Youlou was a Roman Catholic priest who founded the Union Démocratique pour la Défense d'Intérêts Africains (Democratic Union for the Defense of African Interests), one of the republic's leading political parties, and served as president of the country from 1960 to 1963. Malraux (1901-76) was a prominent French novelist who served as Minister of Culture under De Gaulle in 1959-69.

African Online Digital Library
Building Digital Libraries in an African Context

The African Online Digital Library (AODL) is a portal to multimedia collections about Africa. MATRIX, working in cooperation with the African Studies Center at Michigan State University, is partnering with universities and cultural heritage organizations in Africa to build this resource. Plans are underway to add digital tools in order to enable scholars to work with and add to these materials. Individuals and organizations interested in contributing to the African Online Digital Library are invited to contact us.

The ASK-DL Project

The ASK-DL project is a pioneering initiative in the identification, recovery, integration, consolidation, and dissemination of information contained in rare handwritten and out-of-print African language documents of non-latinate scripts.

ASK-DL is an endeavor to digitize, catalog and index collected documents in an accessible online library enriched with transliterations, translations, annotations and audiovisual content.

ASK-DL is under active development with complete access to the library currently limited.

The library will be launching in the near future so please check back soon...
