Public Housing Racial Policies and Civil Rights: The Inter-Group Relations Branch of the Federal Public Housing Administration, 1936-1963

44 reels; $8,800

This microfilm set released in 2012 presents documents from the Public Housing Administration that extend back to the establishment of federal public housing. The publisher's description notes that this collection includes directives and memoranda related to the Public Housing Administrations policies and procedures. Among the documents are civil rights correspondence statements and policy about race, labor-based state activity records, local housing authorities' policies on hiring minorities, court cases involving housing decisions, racially restrictive covenants, and news clippings. The intra-agency correspondence consists of reports on sub-Cabinet groups on civil rights, racial policy, employment, and Commissioners' staff meetings.

清宫内务府奏销档 (Qing gong nei wu fu zou xiao dang)

300 volumes; $39,833.02 [depending on exchange rate]

Archives of the Imperial Household Agency of the Qing dynasty. The collection contains 300 reprinted volumes from the collection held at the First Historical Archives of China. The Imperial Household Agency was—with 3,000 people—the largest political organization in the Qing dynasty. It managed the Imperial household including its food, apparel, library storage, etiquette, construction, farming, animal husbandry, security, hunting, salt administration, and some collections of taxes and tribute. It consisted of seven agencies and three boards and had more than 30 affiliated agencies, such as one for textile production. The archival files included here are copies of the memorials on Interior Affairs as presented to the Emperor and his decisions based upon those reports, collated in book form for the archives. Its main contents are: the palaces, palace renovations, silver holdings, the appointment and removal of officials, reward and punishment, wedding events, foreign tribute, gifts, sacrifices, the tracking down of escaped eunuchs, inventories, etc.
