Undergraduate Research Work Group

The Undergraduate Research Work Group identifies small, focused collections of primary source material for digitization by CRL to support upper-level undergraduate coursework and instruction. The group also seeks to include unique material held by member libraries that complements the identified themes.

Examples of past collections include:

- Sepoy Mutiny
- World War II and the development of the bomb (The Manhattan Project)
- South and Southeast Asia music and dance materials

History

The group was initially formed as the Liberal Arts Interest Group in the summer of 2007, to work with faculty to identify broad topics and themes for seminars taught at multiple institutions. In 2009, the Undergraduate Research Work Group was renamed to reflect the new constituency, which includes representatives from mid-sized universities as well as liberal arts colleges.
Topics include:

- South & Southeast Asian Music & Dance
- Sepoy Mutiny
- Manhattan Project (Atom Bomb development in WWII)

CRL Strategic Objectives

CRL’s work is supported by a recent grant of $1.45 million from the Andrew W. Mellon Foundation, with the following main objectives:

• Objective 1: Expanding electronic access to critical source materials, particularly news, archives, journals, and dissertations and theses, for the CRL community.

• Objective 2: Supporting responsible, cooperative preservation of print and digital resources.

To enable its community to accelerate the transition from print to digital, CRL is taking action on three fronts:

1. Archiving critical print materials
2. Expanding digital access to primary sources
3. Promoting confidence in, and support for, digital preservation
