Collection Content

FDsys, or the Federal Digital System, was created to be a comprehensive repository of "digitally signed" official publications from all three branches of the Federal Government. The system replaced the GPO Access interface, which was originally developed during the 1990s and was decommissioned in 2012.

Much of the content of FDsys consists of digitized historical documents from U.S. government agencies such as Treasury, Commerce, Education, Interior, and Justice; as well as more recent publications of the Central intelligence Agency, and the final versions of bills and resolutions of the House and Senate of the U.S. Congress from 1993 to the present.

One important feature of FDsys is to ensure the authenticity of electronic government publications by embedding in FDsys copies digital signatures guaranteeing that they are authentic and have not been altered since they were disseminated by GPO.
