Publishers

The following is a list of publishers that have entrusted their content to the Portico archive through formal agreements with us. The publishers with a Yes in the PCA column have named Portico as one possible mechanism to fill post-cancellation access (PCA) claims submitted by participating Portico libraries.

If there are specific scholarly publishers, e-journals, or other scholarly e-resources important for your institution to have preserved in the Portico archive that you do not see on the list, please contact us with your content recommendation.

Compare Library Holdings

Perform a Holdings Comparison at no cost

To assist librarians in making decisions about maintaining print holdings of e-journal content being preserved in Portico, we offer a Holdings Comparison service offered at no cost to participating and non-participating libraries. A Holdings Comparison also lets librarians:

- Actively manage the preservation status of their collection
- Compare costs to other preservation solutions
- Inform a decision about joining Portico

Step 1: Submit your list of ISSNs

In order to compare your library's journal holdings to the content in the Portico archive, we will need a list of the ISSNs associated with the titles that you hold.

This list of ISSNs may be provided to us in either of these two formats:

WHAT PARTICIPANTS SAY

"Nearly 500 journal titles have been cancelled in paper copy, where the digital equivalent exists in Portico. UCL will rely on publishers for e-delivery and will rely on Portico for digital archiving and providing long-term digital access when defined trigger events lead to loss of access."

Paul Ayris, Director, Library Services University College London

Taming Power: Generative Historical Consciousness

David G. Winter
University of Michigan

Power is a necessary dimension of all human enterprises. It can inspire and illuminate, but it can also corrupt, oppress, and destroy. Therefore, taming power has been a central moral and political question for most of human history. Writers, theorists, and researchers have suggested many methods and mechanisms for taming power: through affiliation and love, intellect and reason, responsibility, religion and values, democratic political structures, and separation of powers. Historical examples and social science research suggest that each has some success, but also that each is vulnerable to being hijacked by power itself. I therefore

Taming Power: Generative Historical Consciousness

David G. Winter
University of Michigan

Power is a necessary dimension of all human enterprises. It can inspire and illuminate, but it can also corrupt, oppress, and destroy. Therefore, taming power has been a central moral and political question for most of human history. Writers, theorists, and researchers have suggested many methods and mechanisms for taming power: through affiliation and love, intellect and reason, responsibility, religion and values, democratic political structures, and separation of powers. Historical examples and social science research suggest that each has some success, but also that each is vulnerable to being hijacked by power itself. I therefore introduce generative historical consciousness (GHC) as a concept and measure that might help to secure the benefits of power while protecting against its outrages and excesses. I conclude by discussing the role that GHC may have played in the peaceful resolution of the Cuban Missile Crisis of 1962.

Keywords: power, power motivation, historical perspective, mortality, generativity

Power—the ability or capacity to produce intended effects on a person or group—is an essential feature of all human organizations: of families, organized for mutual material and emotional support; of economic enterprises, or-
