CRL is . . .

- A community of more than 200 academic and independent member research libraries working together through collective action to address shared challenges and advance the values of libraries

- Committed to collecting, stewarding, and celebrating global collections and perspectives at risk of being lost or marginalized

Shared Print: Scholars Trust Collection Analysis

Amy Wood, Head, Technical Services, CRL
Strategic development of shared print collections depends on collection intelligence

CRL analysis data services provide shared print programs and their members with

- A thorough understanding of what the program members have;
- Current information about the status of the national shared print effort;
- Detailed information to enhance local records for optimal participation in data informed collective collection management.

Questions for CRL to Explore

• Does the community have the right tools for this work? If not, what is missing?

• Can we recommend an efficient workflow and staff configuration?

• Do we have a good grasp on cost and can we make decisions about work to include or exclude based on cost?

• How can we better document the process, decisions and results of a comparison to benefit other libraries doing similar work?

• How can we strengthen our processes to scale up the work?
Collaboration among libraries of the ASERL, WRLC, FLARE, and the TRLN to combine the contents of their print journal archives under a single retention and access agreement.

31,601 committed journal titles registered in PAPR for the 52 Scholars Trust participating libraries.

18% of Scholars Trust’s archived titles are held by two or more partners.

83% of its holdings are either the FLARE facility or the WRLC facility.
Overview of Project Steps

Conversation
- Goals
- Timeline
- Process
- Cost
- Written agreement

Libraries Contribute
- Create individual files of records
- Complete survey describing important characteristics of data

Data Integration
- Libraries add files to FTP server
- CRL pulls key bibliographic fields
- Data integrated in database

Reports
- Overview
- Overlap
- Depth of holdings
- Compare to other collections
- Electronic

Leverage Project Analytics to Make Strategic Programmatic Collection Management Decisions

80% of effort

ongoing effort for programs & libraries
1. Review questionnaire
2. Pull relevant data from each record set
3. Massage data into database ingestible format
4. Validate data against WorldCat
5. Aggregate data
6. Analyze aggregated data
7. Reconcile identifiable errors
8. Prepare reports
~8,000 titles, not in PAPR, held by 7 or more participating libraries

Strategic development of shared print collections depends on collection and collective intelligence

Lay the foundation for improved metrics for the future:

- CRL gathering information to aggregate and share with the community;
- Identify data opportunities for future improved collaboration or challenges that could impede collaboration;
- Challenge the obstacles with improved process.

Global Collections Initiative Update:
Expanding Online Resources

James Simon, Vice President for Collections and Services, CRL
Global Collections Initiative - Background

“Research libraries must energetically shift toward digital sources as they continue their support for international scholarship. They must fully internationalize all of their programs and services. And they must build active collaborations, on an international as well as national level, that embrace all relevant players and partners.”

Recommendations from “The Global Dimensions of Scholarship and Research Libraries” forum, April 2013
https://blogs.library.duke.edu/globalscholarship/recommendations/
Global Collections Initiative - Goals

Develop an integrated, self-sustaining international framework to support area and international studies (AIS) in the humanities and social sciences.

Ensure the survival of endangered, often marginalized, source materials, combining preservation with exposure and delivery to researchers.
Global Collections Initiative – Latin America (2016-2019)

Participants:

• Colegio de México
• Fundação Getúlio Vargas (Brazil)

• Ibero-Amerikansiches Institut (Berlin)

• University of Glasgow
• University of Liverpool
• University of London
• University of Oxford
• University of Sheffield

• CRL member institutions
• LAMP/LARRP
Global Collections Initiative - Activities

1. Forge international partnerships to support access to and development of digital resources.

2. Create a sustainable apparatus for electronic access to primary resource collections.

3. Assess capture and archiving practices of born-digital resources.

The Mexican Intelligence Digital Archives (MIDAS)

MIDAS, the Mexican Intelligence Digital Archives (Archivos del Autoritarismo Mexicano), is a crowd-sourced, public access digital archive of historical documents from Mexican intelligence agencies. The collection is drawn from Mexico’s two principal security services, the Dirección Federal de Seguridad (DFS) and the Dirección General de Investigaciones Políticas y Sociales (DGIPS) and covers the period c.1940 to c.1985.

More about this collection

Archivo de la Dirección Federal de Seguridad

Intelligence reports, briefs and analyses from the Dirección Federal de Seguridad, obtained by researchers from the Archivo General de la Nación between 2002 and 2015.

Note: Advanced navigation and full text search capabilities are not yet enabled for this sub-collection.

Archivo Sergio Aguayo

Intelligence reports, government correspondence and assorted media relating to social movements and the state security apparatus with particular reference to 1968, collected in the 2000s by historian and journalist Sergio Aguayo.

OA1 -- Late Qing and Republican-Era Chinese Newspapers

About the Collection
The first half of the twentieth century began with the demise of China’s last imperial dynasty, the Great Qing, and ended with the foundation of the People’s Republic of China in October 1949. Following the 1912 establishment of China’s first post-imperial government, the Republic of China, the country experienced both industrial and social revolution, a civil war during which communist and nationalist forces battled to shape the country’s future, and looming external threats during both world wars.

Proposals A-Z

Participating librarians and scholars provide information here about collections, archives and data sets of interest to area and international studies (AIS) research, propose preservation of those collections and the creation of new digital resources from data sets, and vote on the merits of those proposals. Community input provided here informs and guides the building of new AIS resources.

Arquivos Femininos de CPDOC

Proposal of Partnership between Fundação Getulio Vargas and the Center for Research Libraries to digitize CPDOC’s feminine collection under the Global Collections Initiative.

The debate on women’s role in the public life is becoming ever more relevant. Recent studies have registered the impact of women’s votes in the 2018 election in Brazil, specially showing that, for the first time in Brazilian history, men and women have different voting intentions. The feminist agenda has spread and it has been a crucial part of thinking about the country’s current situation, with the popularization of feminism and the realization that it is impossible to go back on women’s rights that have already been gained.

The increasing political participation...
